

Language Identification Organizer

Listen closely and check off each sentence or partial sentence as you hear it.

- What makes this 100 percent cotton T-shirt unique is that we know everything about how it was made.
- And it took some detective work.
- That's what it was like when we asked people: Where is our cotton farm?
- It's a spinning plant called Indorama and, by the way, it's in Indonesia.
- A little bit like the earth where it came from.
- Is this from Arkansas?
- Now, on the face of it, this doesn't seem to make much economic sense.
- Don't know but it looks like the same as all the cotton around this area.
- But these machines give Bowen an edge over small farmers in the rest of the world.
- You just took your hands off the wheel. You didn't even have to touch it.
- I can make a round and pick more than they picked in their whole lifetime.
- And those countries end up with a lot of trash in their cotton bales.
- One more thing about American cotton: It's not actually that much more expensive.
- the operation could be expected to get more than $100,000 in direct payments from the government.
- A lot of those risks are protected against by government programs, particularly insurance subsidies.
- about the factories in Indonesia and Bangladesh and all the container ships in between.